ANNUAL REPORT

HIGHLIGHTS

Volunteers strengthened risk prevention

Kaisa Huhtela is one of four EU Aid Volunteers who supported Finn Church Aid's local partners in emergency prevention and mitigation. She worked with Lutheran World Federation Uganda for six months.

"I gained a lot professionally. I learned that catastrophe risk prevention makes sense only when the communities are involved from the very beginning of the process and local people's views are taken into account."

Local partners and volunteers evaluated the deployment as positive and confirmed that their priority needs were fulfilled. In all four cases steps were taken to incorporate disaster risk reduction or resilience in their strategies.

EU Aid Volunteers pilot project was financed by ECHO (European Community Humanitarian Office).

Acrobats helped young refugees

Finnish circus professionals taught young Syrian refugees how to juggle, do acrobatics, and perform as clowns in a 80 square metre tent in the Za'atri refugee camp in Jordan.

"In circus class I am not thinking about what happened to me during the war. The circus is like a glimmer of sunlight in the gloom of the camp," one of girls participating describes.

"A circus in a refugee camp may sound odd. But it is a good way for the young people to process the traumatic experiences of war and let off built up steam. Space in the camp is hard to come by", says Topi Hurtig, employee of Sirkus Magenta and social circus professional.

Teachers activate the youths physically and mentally. Being creative and processing feelings is important. Circus is a sport where competition is replaced by cooperation and helping each other.

Circus Za'atri is part of the humanitarian educational help offered to Syrian refugees by Finn Church Aid. The project continued until the end of 2013, but the circus will be continued by a couple of trained refugees.

Two oxen and a plough

Western Equatoria in South Sudan has fertile soil and a sufficient amount of rain, but farming skills were forgotten during the civil war. This means we must start from the beginning. First we must till the fields. Thus far, everything has been done by hand with trenching hoes.

In the project supported by Finn Church Aid, farmers can take out a loan to buy an ox and a plough. Farmers must have an initial capital of approximately ten per cent, i.e. 30 euros. The loan is repaid once the crops are sold.

The ox is not one of the easiest draught animals. A domesticated ox is a good workmate for the first two hours of the day. Then it deems the work of the day done, and will not step in front of the plough again. The horns pack such a punch that the will of the ox is respected.

Farmer Silvana Kajanga says that she has been able to double her farming ground. She saves some of the crops for seed and sells the rest. With the proceeds, she makes repayments on her loan. She has calculated that, thanks to the oxen, the crop this year was so good that she can manage the whole of next year.

The female voice is heard

In Liberia in Western Africa, women are legally equal to men. But often after the husband dies, women are left with no income because they are not aware of their rights. Violence towards women is also common.

In October 2013, five-women groups that discussed the equality between sexes and women's rights were founded in sixty Liberian villages. With support from Finn Church Aid, Liberian female attorneys educated local women, who are now educating other women in turn.

In addition to the women, men also embraced the campaign. After the training, some men admitted to not having always treated women fairly.

"Things have already changed after this three-month training," says Emmanuel Sandi, Finn Church Aid Programme Coordinator.

"Men now let their wives assemble freely, and women have risen to more significant positions in parents' associations, for example. These are small steps with great significance."

Finn Church Aid will continue its work for the promotion of women's rights in 2014.

VISION

Changing the world through support for people in the most vulnerable situations.

Finn Church Aid (FCA) will contribute to positive change by supporting people in the most vulnerable situations within fragile and disaster-affected areas. We specialise in supporting local communities in three priority areas: the right to peace, livelihood and education. We enhance our programmes through global advocacy.

MISSION

Action for human dignity.

VALUES

- Unconditional love for our neighbours
- Unyielding hope
 - Courage
 - Respect

Development starts with peace

The escalating conflicts in the Central African Republic and South Sudan once again evidence how hard it is to achieve stability in fragile countries.

South Sudan, the world's youngest state, is in danger of disintegrating in the battle for power, before it has even started to function properly. In the Central African Republic, the conflict is on the verge of escalating into a battle between religious groups, even though the root causes are poor governance and the inability to distribute power.

Finn Church Aid wants to take real responsibility in the most challenging conflict areas in the world.

With your help we can continue our work in countries such as South Sudan and the Central African Republic which have been torn apart by violence, in the Syrian refugee camps in Jordan, as well as in the Philippines which is trying to recover from one of the strongest typhoons in its history.

During our years of operation, we have made a real, practical difference even in the most difficult areas.

For this we owe thanks to our donors.

The work of Finn Church Aid does not stop when the worst of a catastrophe is over and the cameras of the international media have left the scene. The rebuilding and recovery efforts after the natural disaster in the Philippines will take a long time. In the countries at war, the road to reconciliation is long and building a functional state will take many years. We want to make sure that people are not left alone.

In 2013, Finn Church Aid became the interim secretary of the UN-related Network of Religious and Traditional Peacemakers. The objective of the network is to have an effective presence in places where anger is starting to turn into violence. It is working with local people to try to get the opposing parties to the same negotiating table.

Reducing the fear, bitterness, and oppression connected with war is vital for development.

Welcome aboard.

MOTHERS MORE EFFECTIVE THAN DRONES IN COUNTERACTING TERRORISM

War is the biggest obstacle to development. A country cannot rise from poverty unless there is an end to the breaking up of families, raping of women, and the fear of violence.

That is why the Finn Church Aid theme for 2013-2016 is peace.

“We want to be an internationally acknowledged operator in peace work carried out with traditional communities and religious leaders,” says Finn Church Aid Executive Director Antti Pentikäinen.

One of the key areas of our work is Somalia, torn apart by the civil war that began at the beginning of the 1990s. A few years ago, the state hardly existed. We have made progress with the peace work, but acts of violence are still commonplace. The circumstances are life-threatening to both locals and visitors.

“In Somalia there is no oversupply of organisations working for peace,” Pentikäinen states.

The UN, the Somali government, and president Barack Obama’s administration have all asked Finn Church Aid to assist them in peace work in Somalia. There are specific reasons for this. Finn Church Aid has been able to identify the traditional and religious leaders, who hold the true power in Somalia, and negotiate with them. Extremists must also be taken into account in this work.

“We are wasting money so long as peace negotiators do not work from within the conflicts,” Pentikäinen stresses.

“Far too often, religious leaders are left outside conflict mediation. But it is precisely them who can influence whether people see the enemy as human or not.”

With the help of moderate leaders, we can challenge extreme opinions. Pentikäinen sees this as an opportunity for Somalia.

“Mothers are more influential than drone strikes. If a mother tells their child not to detonate a bomb, that child may give up on their plans. A drone strike cannot achieve the same result.”

The most important task of Finn Church Aid is to be an hour glass between diplomats and civil organisations.

“There is currently a bottleneck in peace work: diplomats are not always familiar with the grass-roots situation. Organisations, on the other hand, provide humanitarian aid, but avoid politics. Finn Church Aid can act as a messenger between the two.”

CHILDHOOD THAT I HAD TO AVENGE
MY FATHER'S MURDER.

Said Adam (right) was forgiven by Mohamed Mohamud Mohamed (left) for his father's murder. They now carry out peace work together. In the middle Mohamed Muhamed Mohamed's cousin Abdi Ismail.

Vengeance replaced with peace and forgiveness

Traditional Somali culture is burdened by the accountability system between clans. If one member of a clan commits a crime, the whole clan is held accountable. Settlements often involve paying large material damages that many clans cannot afford. "This generates new crime," says Jama Egal, FCA peace work professional.

The Somali Peoples Peace Initiative project in Erigavo in Somaliland brings together community leaders, the local government, women, and young people to discuss how these practices could be changed. The work is carried out one dispute at a time. One of the great successes was to break the cycle of vengeance within the Lo'hir clan.

"The arbitration started inside a mosque. In this sacred space, the parties agreed that they want to stop the cycle of vengeance and that they are ready to make peace in another way," Jama Egal says.

The initiative now has success stories to tell. Mohamed Mohamud Mohamed forgave his father's killer.

"The most important realisation was that revenge and killing will not bring my father back. I had thought for my entire childhood that I had to avenge my father's murder. I realised that I was a victim of the cycle of vengeance. My father's killer must be punished, but it is not my job," says Mohamed, 25.

"I regained my life at the beginning of this year. For twenty years I had been afraid and in hiding. I only focused on two things: to kill or be killed. The hardest part was to sit in front of Mohamed Mohamud Mohamed. We swore that we would forgive, tell the truth and stick to our decision," says Said Adam.

PEACE WORK GAINS GROUND

Finn Church Aid has been working in Somalia since 2007. The work requires perseverance, because building peace cannot happen without the trust of the local people.

The Somali Peoples Peace Initiative project supports traditional conflict resolution mechanisms that have been proven effective in addressing regional level conflict in Somalia.

The project is funded by the Somalia Stability Fund. It started in February 2013 and will last 23 months.

The Somalia Central Regions Conflict Resolution and Reconciliation Initiative supported preparation for longer term conflict resolution and reconciliation in the autumn of 2013. It was funded by the UK Government. The local partners were the Center for Research and Dialogue (CRD) and the Horn of Africa Centre for Peace (HACP).

In 2014, peace work will be expanded in Somalia both in terms of quantity and geography.

BEFORE,
I HAD TO CALL
THEM MRS
AND MADAM.

Nepalese Resma Bishanke manufactures slippers and flip-flops in the small enterprise started by the women of the village. Today, she and her partners train other women in the region.

Profitable business idea generates respect

I cannot describe the feeling of being able to teach the women from higher castes. Before, I had to call them Mrs and madam,” Resma Bishanke says, and the look in her eyes speaks volumes.

Bishanke is a dalit woman who is thought to be unclean – casteless. Even though the caste system was abolished in Nepal in the 1960s, the same attitudes live on.

With help from Women’s Bank, dalit women have founded a small company manufacturing flip flops and slippers. It operates out of one room and the porch of a small house.

The women have become so skilled in their work that they are attracting attention outside their village as well. Upon request from the authorities, Bishanke and her partners now train other women in the vicinity.

Their shoes have become very popular. The demand is so great that the company could employ up to 40 women. However, growth relies on access to capital. A small company cannot afford large loan expenditures.

Finnish musician Lauri Tähkä, ambassador of Finn Church Aid, saw the women’s business plan on his visit to Nepal. He decided to donate the initial capital for acquiring business premises.

LIVELIHOOD IS A CHAIN

Making slippers does not secure a livelihood on its own. Income is generated only when products find their way to markets. This requires versatile skills and contacts. You must be able to manage the acquisition of raw materials, the manufacturing process, the marketing of finished products, and the supply chain all the way to the customer. All this must be done cost-efficiently, so that the entrepreneur, in addition to their own salary, is left with the means to develop the company.

Everyone has the right to a secure livelihood. In particular, Finn Church Aid focuses on promoting small-scale entrepreneurship and employment among women and young people, as well as on organising related vocational training.

THE COURSE WAS NUMBER ONE ON THE YOUTHS' WISHLIST.

Useful courses for refugee youths

Finn Church Aid expanded its operations in Za'atri Refugee Camp in northern Jordan and opened a new computer lab and a multipurpose hangar where drama and sports clubs can meet.

In addition to that Finn Church Aid also organised a mobile phone repair course, to enable youth to get a job and earn some money. This was number one on the youths' wishlist. Mobile phones are very important in the refugee camps, and people will try to mend any broken phones.

The new computer lab is expected to increase the number of youth Finn Church Aid reaches daily to over 300 participants.

These young people desperately need activities and opportunities for work. In Za'atri and King Abdullah Park refugee camps, Finn Church Aid predominantly targets youth aged between 15 and 24, as many other organisations focus on younger children.

Finn Church Aid implements a range of activities and courses, such as literacy, English, first aid, drama club, circus, barber skills and football.

Due to the civil war in Syria, 2,5m Syrians have fled to neighbouring countries of Jordan, Lebanon, Iraq, Egypt, and Turkey.

"There has been a slow realisation for the refugees that this camp is going to be their home for much longer than anticipated," says Finn Church Aid's Emergency Relief Coordinator Kate Bean.

YOUTHS ARE AN ASSET

By means of both development cooperation and humanitarian aid, Finn Church Aid supports the right of children and young people to education.

Our second chances programmes focus on displaced youth, refugee youth, child soldiers, teenage mothers and youth heads-of-households. We set up temporary learning spaces and build schools. We provide vocational education especially for women and young people.

"Youths are often seen as victims or instigators of violence, when really they should be considered an asset," says Finn Church Aid's Coordinator for the right to education Minna Peltola.

Emergency aid to disaster-hit areas in the Philippines

When the typhoon Haiyan hit the Philippines on November 8 2013, it became clear quite quickly that this was an extremely powerful storm. Finn Church Aid took action immediately to send emergency aid to the country through local cooperation partners.

The Philippines is prone to storms and typhoons are an annual phenomenon there, but no one could have foreseen the strength of the storm this time. Haiyan conjured up a wave several metres high, which wiped entire villages off the map around the eastern islands of the country.

A team from Finn Church Aid took part in getting emergency relief to the Hernan area in the eastern part of Samar island, which is one of the worst affected areas.

The cargo included emergency relief packages that were larger than usual. They contained a 25-kilo sack of rice and other food stuffs such as dried fish, salt and sugar, as well as dishes and cooking utensils for each family. In addition to this, the cargo included hygiene packages containing soap and laundry detergent, toothbrushes and toothpaste, bath towels and sanitary towels. And finally, the packages also included mosquito nets, two blankets, and two sleeping mats.

The crowd in Batang cheered and clapped when the list of items in the relief packages was read out loud before distributing the packages.

“This is a great help”, said mother of four Eva Campo, after she had received her package.

Of the 186 houses in the village of Batang, only six survived. Twenty people were killed.

Typhoon Haiyan left 4.1 million people homeless. Over 1.2 million houses were destroyed. Over 6,000 people were killed. Approximately 600,000 school children were left without an intact school building. After a catastrophe it is vital that children return to school as soon as possible. Therefore Finn Church Aid decided to focus on building temporary schools after the emergency relief phase.

Relief packages are delivered in the village of Carmen in Samar, Philippines.

There are 100 000 people living at the Za'atri refugee camp in Jordan who have fled the war in Syria.

THE SITUATION WORSENER FOR SYRIANS

As the civil war in Syria continued, Syrian refugees faced more hardship.

According to estimates by the UN Refugee Agency UNHCR, approximately 100,000 people lived in Za'atri, the largest refugee camp in Jordan, towards the end of 2013. The conditions in refugee camps are harsh, and approximately 3,500 families were forced to spend the winter in tents again.

Foreign aid Finn Church Aid operates in the Za'atri and King Abdullah Park refugee camps in Jordan and has also supported refugee work within Syria through local partners.

Improving food security in South Lubero

Due to the security problems in the South Lubero area in the Democratic Republic of Congo, many farmers end up fleeing their otherwise productive land to seek refuge in more secure villages and towns.

This has put a strain on the displaced and host communities likewise, who find themselves struggling to feed their families.

In cooperation with its partners, FCA seeks to address the issue of vulnerability of the local population by strengthening food security through the increase of food production through agricultural activities and unconditional cash transfers to the most vulnerable households.

Another goal of the project is civil protection. Active sensitization of communities on children's rights, the rights of women, general human rights, HIV/AIDS and sexual and gender based violence is carried out through guided and participatory discussions and training.

In total, the project has a direct impact on the lives of 6,000 families (about 36,000 individuals) and a far reaching effect on the lives of another 281,760 individuals in the target area and the surroundings.

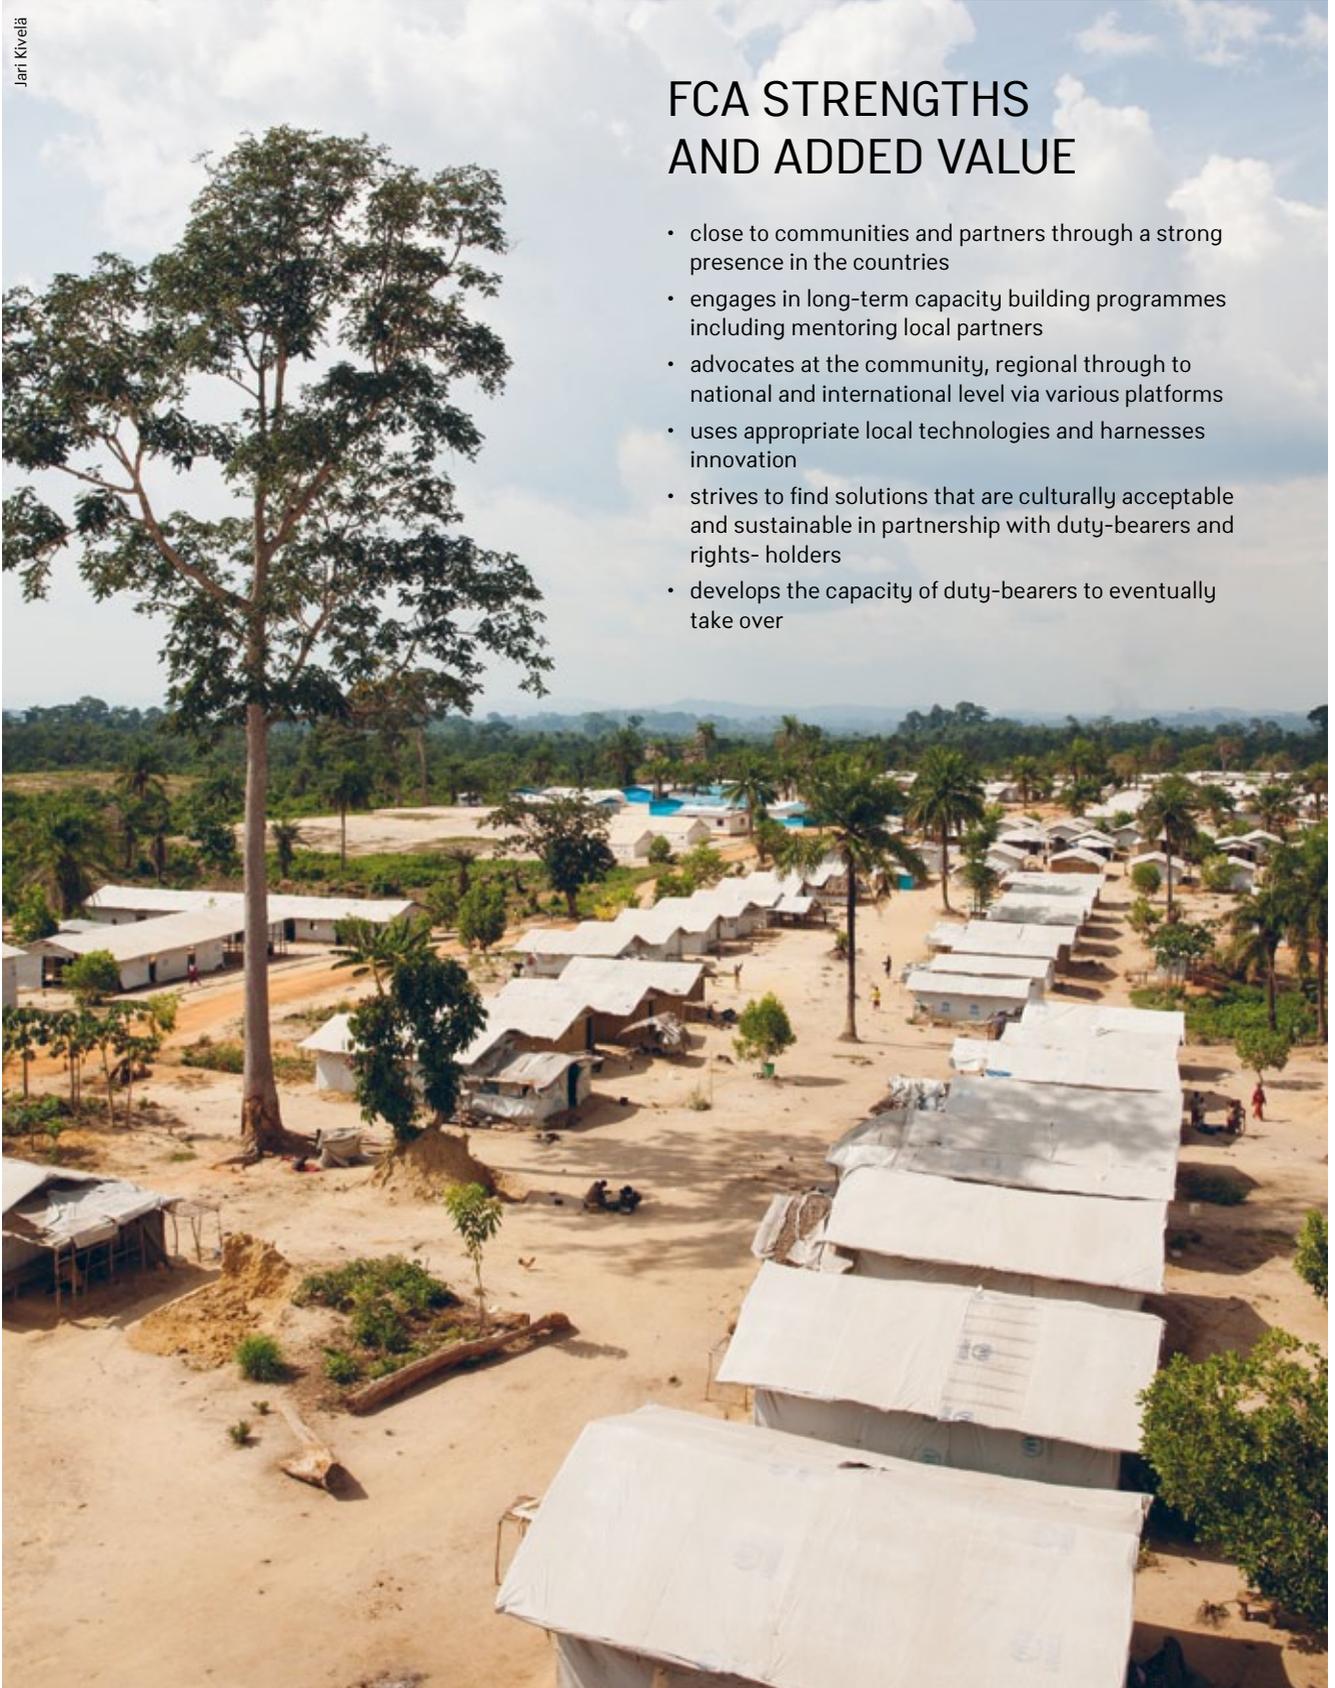

The project, which commenced in January 2013, lasts 15 months, and is funded by ECHO (the European Community Humanitarian Office).

➡ New strategy starting to bear fruit

Focusing operations on fragile countries, which often also have conflicts, has proven to be both a good and a challenging strategy. The themes of peace work, livelihood, and education complement each other well. The strategic choice of concentrating on peace work, in addition to development cooperation and humanitarian aid, by supporting traditional communities has proven to be effective. By focusing our work on sufficiently narrow sectors, we can also bring added value to the work of other international operators.

In 2013, Finn Church Aid put a total of 31 million euros to use in international aid and domestic operations. Compared to the previous year, there was a decrease of 6.2 percent. The income from fundraising activities was 33.8 million euros, a 14.6 percent increase from the previous year. Funds raised for catastrophes will be also used for relief work at the beginning of 2014.

➡ Internal audit increases visibility

The internal audit of Finn Church Aid ensures that the funds entrusted to us are used efficiently and in accordance with our agreements. In 2013, the audit focused on three entities: Following best management practices, project management processes, and the financial management competence of regional offices. The internal audit work is managed by an inspection committee that is independent from the strategic management.

➡ Personnel

At the end of 2013, Finn Church Aid had a total of 207 employees, of whom 133 worked in the Helsinki office, 35 served in the local regional offices and 74 had been hired locally. Total person-years stood at 193. In addition to this, temporary F2F and telephone fundraisers added four more person years.

➡ Future development

In the future Finn Church Aid must keep focusing on its main countries of operation and ensure that added value is realised in the chosen themes. This requires further investments, for example, in partnerships, where work can be carried further and its influence increased.

The basis for the work of Finn Church Aid is the church's diaconal stance of giving support where the need is greatest and where others do not help. In the end, the objective is to reinforce peoples' belief that the world can be changed together and solutions can be found to even the most difficult problems.
